Only ~50% of Graduates in India are Job-Ready

India has one of the youngest populations in the world, with millions of students aspiring to pursue higher education. Yet, only about 50% of graduates are employable, lacking the skills required for real jobs.*

What's missing

Healthcare is Creating Real Job Opportunities

At the same time, the healthcare sector — the world's largest employer — is facing a 1.8 crore workforce shortage globally by 2030.

In India, the sector is growing at ~22% annually[^], creating demand across hospitals, diagnostics and healthcare services. This demand extends beyond doctors and nurses to roles that support patient care and hospital operations — creating opportunities for faster entry into the workforce.

Many countries like Japan, Germany, Canada, USA, England have opened immigration to overcome this shortage.

Annual Growth Rate of India's Healthcare Sector

Healthcare demand is rising rapidly, but what employers need are skilled, job-ready professionals who can contribute from day one. This creates a clear opportunity for students who are willing to build the right skills early.

Unlike traditional paths, many healthcare roles allow you to start working sooner — with focused training, real-world exposure and clear job pathways across hospitals and healthcare organisations.

The right skills can help you enter a high-demand industry, faster
